

Patrick D'Arcy
Governor

Patrick D'Arcy became a Governor in September 2015 (having previously served as a co-opted member of the Finance Committee for 18 months).

Born in Ireland, Patrick graduated with a BSc in Construction Economics at what is now the Technological University in Dublin before moving to Scotland where he lived in Glasgow and Edinburgh for 18 months working for a multinational engineering firm.

In 1988, he moved to London working initially for a major construction group and in 1990 he joined a Quantity Surveying and Project Management consultancy becoming a Partner in 1997. The business worked mainly for private sector clients such as national retailers, major investment banks, national residential developers and data centre operators.

In 2007, he became Managing Partner and ran the UK business for the next ten years. Patrick retired from the business in 2018.

He lives in Chiswick, is married and has two children.

His wife, Bridget is a Primary School teacher.

His son is completing his A-Levels and his daughter is completing her GCSEs

In his spare time, Patrick is a Fulham season ticket holder and has a passion for classic cars.
